Our volunteer firefighters

Courage that can't be extinguished

Most people will flee from a burning building, but firefighters face the blaze head-on. Indeed, there are few professions that require the kind of selfless courage that's displayed by members of the fire service. Plus, many are volunteers, particularly in rural areas.

In addition to putting out fires, firefighters are often the first responders during medical emergencies and at car accidents. As such, they must be trained to perform basic lifesaving interventions and assist paramedics. In some communities, they even carry naloxone to treat opioid overdoses.

Similarly, when firefighters are called to the scene of a car crash, their duties aren't limited to extinguishing an engine fire. Firefighters must assist other emergency personnel to extricate victims from damaged vehicles and clear the wreckage. They may also receive special training to safely rescue people from confined spaces, collapsed buildings and beneath ice.

Firefighters carry out their duties in extreme heat and blinding smoke. They work long shifts, both day and night, and risk their lives. In recent years, many firefighters have even volunteered to help their colleagues in other communities and countries battle volatile wildfires. This is a profession where altruism knows no bounds.

Our paramedics

Heroes on the medical frontline

In an emergency, the medical care a patient receives on the way to the hospital can determine whether they live or die. This is the responsibility that falls on the shoulders of paramedics across the country.

When they're called upon to help someone, they must be prepared for anything. During a single shift, they might go from the scene of a devastating car crash to helping a woman give birth in her home. Regardless of the circumstances, paramedics must learn to contain their emotions and focus on the patient in front of them.

Composure and quick thinking are crucial when delivering emergency medical care. Paramedics must be able to assess each patient's condition and make decisions about the appropriate treatment, sometimes within seconds. In addition to extensive training, this job requires substantial mental and physical resilience.

Over the years, the emergency medical services profession has evolved. What began as a taxi service to the hospital has become a veritable emergency room on wheels. Paramedics don't simply perform CPR and bandage wounds; they're highly trained medical professionals with the expertise to administer intravenous medication, use advanced diagnostic equipment and perform minor surgical procedures — all from the back of a moving ambulance.

Our police officers

Unsung heroes in local communities

Good policing shapes communities. It enforces the rule of law and provides people with safe places to live and raise their children. Unfortunately, police officers are unsung heroes in many areas.

It can be difficult to appreciate the same law enforcement officers who dole out traffic tickets and hand out fines. Too often, such interactions eclipse the daily hard work and dedication of police forces across the country.

However, these officers put themselves in the line of fire to keep communities safe. Additionally, they solve and prevent crimes that range from robberies and drug trafficking to vehicle thefts and murder.

Their work puts them in contact with society's most ill-intentioned individuals, but also its most vulnerable. Law enforcement officers therefore need the grit to take down criminals and the compassion to help crime victims.

Police officers strive to establish trust and mutual respect with the various cultural, socio-economic and religious groups in their communities. They also frequently interact with individuals who struggle with substance abuse, mental illness and homelessness. As such, it's a profession that requires integrity, empathy and highly developed interpersonal skills.

Thank you Moosomin Fire Department for your brave and tireless work!

9/11 Stair Challenge

In honor of the people who lost their lives on 9/11, Anytime Fitness in Moosomin, Esterhazy and Yorkton held a 9/11 Stair Challenge with proceeds donated to local non-profit organizations in each community.
